

¹ Journal of Management Education 31(10):1025, 1026. Abstract: This study explored the experiences of international students in the workplace and the impact of these experiences on their career development. The study was conducted in a large, multi-national corporation. The results of the study indicate that international students experience a variety of challenges in the workplace, including cultural differences, language barriers, and discrimination. These challenges can have a negative impact on their career development, leading to lower job satisfaction and higher turnover rates. The study also found that international students who receive support from their employers, such as training and mentorship, are more likely to succeed in their careers.
